A D D R E S S.

THE free and the enlightened spirit of government in Britain, which is the just boast of its natives and the subject of admiration to foreigners, is in no instance so conspicuous as in the toleration granted to all religious sects; by which means, principally, full scope is given to the free elicitation of moral principles, and the exercise of social virtues. The various excellent and munificent charitable Institutions with which this kingdom abounds is a decisive evidence that where the mind is unshackled, the heart expands, and human nature beams with all its native excellence. Charity---that benign sentiment which approximates man to his celestial origin, is the point around which the votaries of every persuasion rally, and the centre whose attraction proves the congeniality of their feeling.

The Jewish nation has, from its continued conflicts with external evils, ever been thrown into a concentrated collision with the sufferings of its indigent members, so that the sentiment of charity has grown with its renovated growth, and become, as it were, inherent in its nature; insomuch, that in this happy country, where its propensities have freedom for expansion, no object of charity has failed to meet with relief, and no benevolent scheme fallen short of support: peculiarity of tenets has never been the occasion of any distinction, for the proper object of humanity is Man: to their own poor, however, their peculiar attention must naturally be most forcibly drawn; and the consideration that occasional relief can only be temporarily useful, has given rise to the endeavour, by some radical means, to prevent the recurrence of misery. This was the end and purport for which the "Jews' Hospital, for Aged Poor and the Education and Employment of Youth," was projected, and by Christian as well as Jewish liberality happily instituted.

The Establishment commenced, in 1807, with the reception of ten aged and eighteen young persons, which by subsequent benevolences the Managers have been enabled to augment as follows :

12 Aged Persons,

12 Boys, Shoe-Makers,

6 Ditto, Basket-Makers,

6 Ditto, Chair-Makers,

8 Ditto, at School

32 Boys,

20 Girls.

64 Inmates.

Five Boys having completed their apprenticeship will shortly leave the House, who, it is presumed, will practically evince the excellence of their tuition by the propriety of their conduct and the perfection of their talent.

Seventeen Girls have already been placed in respectable families as servants, of whom two have, according to a regulation to that end, claimed and received five guineas each as a gratuity for their certified correct conduct; and one Girl (proving well qualified) has been articled to the School-Mistress in the House, as an Assistant Teacher.

Highly gratifying must be the reflection of thus affording comfort to the indigent aged, who, reduced by misfortune from a former state of comparative affluence, are at the decline of life enabled to end their mortal career with content and ease : but still more delightful must be the feelings of the benevolent, in beholding a member of the rising generation rescued from the evils of penury and vice, and educated in the principles of religion and morality, instructed in the knowledge of useful arts, and habituated to industrious occupations, eventually sent forth useful and exemplary members of society.

The affairs of the Institution are managed, under the Patronage of his Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex, by the President, two Vice-Presidents, and two Treasurers, who, with twelve selected Governors, form the Committee for General Purposes ; a House Committee of twenty-four Governors, for the internal regulation, further subdividing themselves into Sub-Committees for the superintendence of Education, &c. &c. &c.

us also by a Trade and a Building Committee. Thus constituted, the Jews' Hospital dispenses its benefits whereby the Poor may be said to be more than relieved, the Aged find an asylum in the decline of life, while the Youth are piously educated, trained in industrious habits, and taught handicraft trades for their future furtherance in life. Society thus becomes a gainer, and the Jewish nation acquires respect and honour.

Nor indeed has it failed to produce the latter happy effect; for through the introduction of its late President, (D. Eliason, Esq.) his Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex has been induced to honour the Institution with an inspecting visit, and after graciously expressing his approbation of its purposes and conduct, condescended to honour the last Anniversary with his royal presence; when warmly impressed with the true spirit of charity, he generously declared himself its Patron, with a promise of his future countenance.

More than half of the ground occupied by the Hospital being held on a short lease from the Crown, a petition has been presented to the Commissioners of his Majesty's Woods and Forests for its prolongation: which Board in consideration of the premises being occupied for a charitable purpose, has granted a renewel of the lease for ninety-nine years, on certain terms, and has even been kind enough to supersede a plan of improvement before laid down by the Surveyor of the Crown, for building a street and terrace, which would have occupied the whole of that scite; the Hospital, on its part, engaging to build to the amount of £2000 for its own purposes only, and to submit their plans to the Board. In compliance with this, it is in contemplation immediately to fulfil a previous Resolution for the erection of a distinct habitation for the aged persons, whose comforts will thus be increased, while the young will be less exposed to contract the objectionable habits and vitiated language generally found to be attached to the aged of this class: as well as some further improvements which are necessary to enlarge the Offices, and afford more convenience for the reception of a greater number of youth.

The Anniversary is not only a scene exhilarating to the philanthropist and a festival of self-gratulation to the Governors, but it is an exhibition of true charity, where, disregarding any distinction of religion or sect, the heart expands with the warm impulse of humanity ; and the Jews' Hospital is honoured by royal protection, and liberally supported by all parties as an Institution calculated to benefit the poor, and promote the general interests of society ; while it proves that persons of every persuasion can, by becoming useful citizens, be protected and flourish under the mild and free constitution of the British realm.
